"The Living Language Platinum series has dragged the world of language learning into the 21st century."-Newsday

I just started the course and will update as I progress. This system is a very standard approach to learning a language. You start with the basics and slowly work up. The set comes with audio CDs, workbooks/texts, and online access to live tutors, forums, and online games/lesson reinforcements. When I was looking for a course, I felt it was important to have something that explains the grammar. I looked into Rosetta Stone French but found that I got unnecessarily confused by simple things like tu vs. vous because I was not quite perceptive enough to pick up on the subtle differences between pictures. These subtleties are explained as you go in living language. I tried the online tutor for an orientation session and was the only student (there can be up to 3) so we also did some basic lesson. It will take me awhile to get over the awkward feeling of watching a stranger (they can only hear you, not see you, unless you let them) but I find that this is a very promising modality. I have wireless high speed internet and I don't think it would work well with anything less. Else-wise, if you are looking for a 'novel' approach, this is clearly not it. If you like learning languages in a very straightforward manner, this is a good option. It's got enough to get you started.

This set moves pretty quickly so don't get frustrated if you don't pick it up by the third time. I've been brushing up over the last year or so on the French I initially learned in high school eons ago. I've done classes, Pimsleur, books, online tools. I view this is another way to try to bring up my conversational level. I enjoy them, like having both the disk and book. My one complaint is that they do not normally pause long enough for you to repeat most phrases. So you really need to know your stuff and jump on it quickly to get it out before they do. But I look at that as a change and just repeat the disk if I mess up too much.

I love it.... If I could practice often I be fluent by now....

Platinum edition doesn't worth $108.The best choice is to buy a Complete edition (for about $30-40).Online Living Language support is poor and Platinum add-ons have 1-year limited warranty

I love this Living Language French. I've only just started it, but the approach is simple to follow and easy to grasp the language with audio and visual queues. I haven't tried the online community yet, but I'm sure that interacting with other "students" will be a helpful addition to learning. I can't compare this to Rosetta stone, as I've personally never tried it, but this is an immersive, fun way to learn the language. After you get through a lesson there are little games and quizzes to test your comprehension and learning. I like that it starts out right away with learning useful phrases and words. So if you're planning to take a trip to a place that is predominantly French-speaking, you can at least get the basics in before you go. You can also take the lesson with you on your smartphone with flashcards, audio conversations and more. the perfect thing for a long flight! :) I'm hopeful that soon I'll be able to confidently say "Je parle la Francais!" and mean it! I really enjoy this learning approach - once I am through with my French lesson, I'll be moving on to Spanish with the Living Language system.

I've been trying out all of the major brands of language learning software since nothing ever really stuck for me in school. The more expensive programs out there are better but not worth the extra cash. The cheap programs are usually worth what you pay for them. This one is actually pretty good although a bit reading intensive. As a graduate student that actually works for me but I suspect most people are really going to need something more orally-focused since the average traveler is going to be focused more on conversational French. At the price point though I would still likely recommend it to most people. A local informal class or tutor would probably be the most effective way to quickly learn French however.

I only use this in my car and I don't drive a lot so I'm progressing VERY slowly. I like the voices of the speakers and the pause/ repeat format which has really helped my pronunciation. I recommend to, those who already know some French. I am brushing up 50 yrs! after 12 yrs of school study. If I didn't have this background I would definitely need to be seeing the words while they are saying them. French pronunciation is so different from what we Americans would guess when we read the words!

I have not made it through the entire course by any means, but my impression is that this is based on the most common method of language education in primary schools, including three books that are combination textbook and workbook. The books are in three levels: essential, intermediate, and advanced. There are 9 CDs in all, three for each level. It would be impossible for me to really compare such a system to something like Rosetta Stone, which seems to be the default method everyone compares to now, but Rosetta Stone is based on an immersion method that does not involve learning basic things like spelling or grammar. One is just thrown into an immersive environment to sink or swim, pretty much as we all are as babies, so there has to be something to be said for that. If, however, you feel it is important to learn the basics of the new language with reference to the old language, this may be a better approach.
