Facts About Marijuana (Parent Guides To Childhood Drug Use Book 5)

Synopsis

This concise publication about marijuana is written in easy-to-read and to understand terms. It is written for parents, other family members and educators concerned about the effects of marijuana on children and adolescents. Marijuana is the most widely used illegal drug in America. Marijuana is a plant that can be grown almost anywhere. Many Americans farm plots in secluded areas. Others grow it indoors with artificial light. Some grow it in their homes. It is possible to find at least one plant in nearly every American neighborhood. Because it is easy to grow, and because there are so many users to purchase it, marijuana has become a major cash crop. In 1937, the government classified marijuana as a dangerous drug and began an anti-marijuana campaign. They described marijuana as the killer weed. Movies such as Reefer Madness portrayed marijuana users as demented slaves to the drug. Medical professionals believed it caused insanity. Although there was no scientific evidence to support these views, the use of marijuana declined dramatically. During the Vietnam War era of the 1960s and early 1970s, the widespread use of marijuana re-entered American society. Soldiers and students used the drug as an act of rebellion against government policies. Some people claimed that if more people used marijuana the world would be beautiful and peaceful. Because of a lack of scientific information, marijuana came to be known as a harmless drug. The marijuana of the 21st Century, however, is far more powerful than ever before in its history of use. Contemporary scientific research has proven that marijuana is neither killer weed nor harmless. Rather, its effects are somewhere between these extremes. Many users of marijuana are exposed to marijuana in childhood. Because they are still developing physically, emotionally and mentally, marijuana use in youth is especially dangerous. One of its most significant effects is short-term memory loss. Children who use marijuana may also: Have learning difficulties, Lose their energy and desire to achieve, Experience delay in the maturation process, Have slowed emotional development and, Have difficulty forming meaningful relationships. The information presented in this publication will help the reader more fully understand how dependency on marijuana use can affect the lives of children.
