Leonard Bernstein did something extraordinary in creating his young people's concerts. He brought classical music to a young audience that otherwise might not have been exposed to this music. I was one of those young people and I can say that I learned my love of classical music as a result of

Mr. Bernstein's great gift to the world of music. Mr. Bernstein was a truly gifted teacher and we are blessed that most of his Young People's Concerts are available on video or DVD. Wonderful to experience once again, after religiously watching and hearing all the original broadcasts from 1959-1973, times that now seem so innocent, with the opportunity to now reflect upon the original program content and personality of Leonard Bernstein. As an amateur musician, in the classic sense, wanting to intellectually communicate an appreciation of music with others, it is refreshing to review those programs as a primer for any and all kinds and styles of music that will live for as long as we keep breathing.

Had this book for a college class. Not my favorite subject to read, but it was better than most textbooks I've had.
